Group Leader: Anne Brereton

Fifteen members of the travel group have just returned from a very memorable holiday in Crete. I hadn't realised how large the island is. We had wonderful weather, fantastic scenery and a very historical tour of this unforgettable island.

We were taken back to the Minoan period by a very well informed guide who provided us at some length to the history of this ancient past. I find that all guides do fill us with a little to much information but nevertheless the Minoan period was fascinating and artefacts are still being found today.

A visit to Spinalonga island was not really long enough to give a true insight into the leper colony's extraordinary time there. Maybe I will have to read the book called The Island by Victoria Hislop to find out more.

A few of us did our own thing on our free days but we all met up over dinner with plenty of chat and laughs. Entertainment at the hotel was not so great but sitting outside with good company and a drink was worth a lot more. Looking forward to our next adventure.
